Herb & Tonic

Herbal smoke curled above the roofs long after sunset. Careful hands prepared tonics, poultices, and warm cups for those who needed them. By morning the sickrooms were quieter, and the settlement's strength had been preserved without ceremony.

Old Foundations

While clearing soft earth for new walls, we found footings older than any living witness. The stone still held. Work laid down generations before us now bears our weight, and asks only that we build with equal care.
