BURDEN

Stampede

When the armies retreated, they left beasts too frightened to command. We found fences burst outward and tracks driven deep through the mud. With time they may settle, but today they remember only flight.

Rot in the Vault

The vault opened cleanly, but damp had worked there for centuries. Pages clung together like old wounds, and ink bled where hope had been stored. Care may save some of it, haste will ruin the rest.

Wares of War

Merchants still trade from the old war stores: dented shields, boiled leather, hole-ridden breastplates, and blades worn too thin by use. After each bargain, silence lingers over the table.
