BURDEN

Bare Walls

The houses keep out wind and rain, but little else. Bare timber, cold rooms, and empty shelves make shelter feel unfinished. Settlement comes slowly when homes still look temporary.

BURDEN

Empty Shelves

These halls were built for warmth, music, and shared meals. Now bowls are half-filled, ale is watered, and singers leave early. Fellowship is harder to maintain when the shelves can no longer support generosity.

Roads Too Far

The roads stretch faster than we can tend them. A path laid for welcome now sits beyond easy care, its ruts filling with mud and its lanterns unlit. A late traveller arrived tonight already doubting the road.

BURDEN

Houses, Not Homes

New houses rise quickly, but walls alone are not enough. I counted roofs fit for shelter, yet too few warm meals, blankets, and outstretched hands to make those roofs feel like home.
